Can FPV meet China's power consumption?

The total area of reservoirs and lakes larger than 1 km² in China is about 100,471.58 km². Theoretically,the power generation by FPV can meet China's power consumption in the next few decades. In addition,FPV will play an important role in saving water resources,reducing carbon emissions,and reducing dependence on fossil energy.

Does China have FPV construction experience?

At present,China has carried out some large-scale FPV construction,and has relevant experience in design,construction,management,operation and maintenance,which would be extremely important for more FPV construction (Armstrong et al. 2020).

Can FPV reduce heat storage effect of Cascade reservoirs in Southwest China?

Southwest China has strong solar radiation and a large number of deep-water reservoirs, which are suitable for mixed operation of FPV and hydropower. Although FPV is considered to be able to slow down the heat storage effect of cascade reservoirs in Southwest China (Zhou et al. 2019), this degree of mitigation needs further studies.

Does China have FPV potential?

There are few studies on the assessment of China's FPV potential and the previous research was on all waters in China including rivers,lakes,reservoirs,and ponds (Liu et al. 2017),many of which such as rivers and small ponds are not suitable for FPV installations.
